Joining a professional organization such as Limestone Fire Department requires a significant commitment of personal time. This decision should take into account commitments and priorities that you already have established, such as school, work, and family obligations. Consider that initial training as an Emergency Responder (EMR) requires 60 hours and EMT-Basic requires 120 hours. These classes typically meet twice a week at either Limestone Central, AMT, or the EMS office. These classes last up to 4 months, including weekends.

Given your current schedule/obligations, please complete the below chart, indicating your current availability for training and participation in activities at Limestone Fire Department.
